

Making Headlines

The new Guardian headquarters occupy 14,000 sqm at the landmark Kings Place development near London's King's Cross, designed by architect Dixon Jones.

"This project reinforces how Bisley products can be developed and customised to respond to the different requirements of end users" says Adam Moan at Bennet.

Bisley has provided a mix of MySpace™ lockers and LateralFile™ units, to help to deliver an environment that supports flexible team working, catering for the needs of a changing media environment.

Employees have their own dedicated MySpace™ locker for personal storage, and will work by an unallocated bench desking system. The MySpace™ units are fitted with a bespoke sloping top, turning them into "lecturn" reading units for browsing newspapers and other publications. The unique charcoal colour with a matt finish, contrasts with the white desking.
